The Working-Woman
 And Her Idle-Rich Sister
 —by Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

MRS. ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

WHY THE FUTURE IS BRIGHT FOR THE AMERICAN WORKING GIRL
 By Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

Having the conditions and repeating the causes of poverty as to-day.

Never were there so many carefully reared men and women of luxury and position giving time, thought and money to the bettering of the lives of the working classes as now.

And the cause of this spirit of helpfulness can be traced to the much criticized and often abused newspapers.

It is because the newspapers describe the sufferings and wrongs to which the toilers of earth are oftentimes subjected that the other half of the world has been aroused to intelligent and consistent action.

In Chicago Miss Gertrude Barnum turned from a continual round of social pleasures to a study of the lives of working women, and to-day she occupies the position of National Secretary of the Woman's Trade Union League.

Miss Margaret Dreier, of Brooklyn, hard and bred to luxury and accustomed to all the advantages wealth can offer, has long been a familiar figure among the toilers and helpers in Rivington street, and is now the president of the Working Trade Union League, of New York.

Miss Barnum has recently come to New York to fortify the labor unions and to use her influence with women of wealth and fashion to reform their patronage to shops where hours and conditions are inconsistent with our Christian civilization.

It would astonish the masses of working people all over the land were they to know the exact number of women of fashion and means who give a goodly portion of each day and a large portion of their incomes to the interests of labor.

And this work is done, not in a spirit of condescension, and with an air of superiority, but with a whole-some, hearty good will.

and an earnest desire to right some of the wrongs which greed and monopoly have brought about with the sudden growth of our young democracy to power and opulence.

It seems to be the conviction of most of these educated women who have studied the questions which present themselves to the close observer that the one need at present among the working women of the land is to organize.

Only in this manner, declare these women, can the sweatshop atrocities be prevented; those abodes of disease and despair, where women work from dawn until dark, and often into the late evening, at starvation prices that their employers, the millionaires, and the unthinking public, may be benefited by selling and buying "bargains."

Of her efforts to organize the toilers, Miss Dreier says:

"Undoubtedly unless for the women will prove as beneficial as unions for the men. The rich are aiding and assisting their toiling sisters, not with money, but by devoting energy and time to solving the problem—by laying the plans so that the workers may consider them and test the practical side. With trades workers on the board can other than ultimate success crown our efforts?"

The work which is being done in the Settlements of New York toward the elevation and enlargement of thought for the world workers has all been the outgrowth of cultured and educated minds.

It is wonderful work, and its influence runs from the slums straight to God.

Not long ago a young woman who visits the settlements and leagues in the interests of a conservative newspaper, made the somewhat sweeping assertion that the so-called wealthy philanthropists only injured the lives of their toiling sisters by their attempts to breach the chasm between the classes.

"Fine ladies in silks and jewels drive to the East Side in carriages and organize entertainments," said this critic, "and the toiling women are filled with envy and stirred by foolish ambitions to emulate their patrons in dress and manners. It leads to discontent, envy and extravagance among the East Side laborers, and reduces domestic

NOW IT IS THE GREAT OCEAN SCRAPPER!

How a New Epoch for Labor and Progress Is Marked by the Building of Two Cunarders, Which Are Like 8-Story Floating Hotels, with Passenger Elevators and Large Staterooms, Even in the Steerage.

VARIABLE scrapers upon the ocean, equipped with elevators and all the other conveniences of the great modern hotel, carrying their thousands of tourists, between America and Europe faster than they were ever carried before—what result of labor and progress could be more striking, more inspiring than this?

In all the world of merchandise there has been no greater activity and progress than in the building of new ocean steamships. First, then, stimulating the big ship yards to do their utmost, have alternately broken records for speed and for the size of their floating palaces until now the look scrapers of New York, Chicago and London are being duplicated by ocean steamships, eight hundred feet long and more than sixty feet high, which, equipped with engines and boilers of 15,000 horsepower, will cross the Atlantic at a speed of twenty-five miles an hour.

Two of these passenger steamship leviathans are now nearing completion, one in the yard of Swan & Hunter on the Tyne, and the other at the John Brown Company's works, Clydebank. They are Cunarders, and represent the culmination of Great Britain to win back the Atlantic coast lost several years ago to the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse, whose sister ship, the Deutschland and the Kaiser Wilhelm II, have since helped easily to retain it.

Mark a New Epoch of Progress.
The half-century construction of one of these new steamships, illustrated on this page, from a dozen recently printed by the Scientific American, gives a good idea of the great bounds in advance of their predecessors these new ships make. They mark a new epoch of labor and progress.

The engineering problems involved in thus far breaking away from old standards are more difficult of solution than those encountered in any other branch of the profession. In the building of bridges the strain of varying winds has to be calculated to a plenty in connection with other complications. But in this case there is an immense structure representing a greater area of rigid iron and steel than that of any building firmly planted on land, which must go at whatever speed thousands of miles through the roughest seas, tossed about and buffeted, and yet unscathed.

The largest ship now afloat—the Baltic—has a length of 725 feet, 70 feet less than these new ships, and a beam of 76 feet, against 81 for the new ship. But the Baltic has only 18,000 horsepower, and makes a pace of only little more than sixteen miles an hour. The best speed of the German boats above named is only a little over twenty-three miles an hour.

Regular Thirty-six Feet of Water.
It is one of the laws of steamship construction that the greater the speed the greater the strain upon the structure. The great increase in length—almost four feet more than the Kaiser Wilhelm II—further increases the strain to be calculated upon.

The German ship has only 40,000 horsepower, and her displacement is 50,000 tons against 55,000 for the new Cunarders. The plated depth of the new ship is fifty feet, the plating being carried up one deck higher than usual, as part of the strengthening of the structure longitudinally. Where the plates lay their thickness is three inches. The extreme draft of thirty-six feet will not be available at the port of New York until the new channel has been completely dredged out. But the Government has promised sufficient depth by the time the Cunarders are ready to enable them to enter and depart drawing thirty-three and one-half feet of water.

These ships will be equipped with turbine engines, and so this type of engine has usually developed a horsepower considerably in excess of the contract. It is expected that these ocean steamships will exceed the high speed of twenty-five miles per hour.

There are two striking new departures in the construction of the hulls of these new ships. They are the first to depart from the accepted standard of measurement, in that they exceed in beam the proportions of the Great Eastern. By placing at the bow a double bottom of unusual depth—5 feet 6 inches between the outer and inner shells, which grows shallower from the bow to the stern—the new ship is able to level with the first of the eight decks. This doubly bottom is the chief new means of strengthening the hull.

Driven by Four Turbine Engines.
The great width of the ship makes it possible to place four of the largest size boilers abreast and still leave room for large coal bunkers. There will be four turbine engines, all located on the same plane.

The great beam of the ship permits the four propellers to be located in a row, instead of the two abreast as in the case of the Umbria. The lower pair will be just forward of the rudder in the usual position, and the outside pair forward of the lower pair. The practicability of all these innovations in size, structure and power has been demonstrated by a fifty-foot working model subjected to every possible test. But what is of especial interest to ocean travelers is the new features designed for their comfort, whether steaming on first-class or in the steerage. In the first place, the height of the full decks for the space of first-class passengers demands the introduction of passenger elevators as much as departments and hotels of an equal number of stories—and these are supplied for the first time in a floating habitation. As the accompanying illustration indicates, there is an elevator shaft on each side of the ship, connecting all the decks. As first-class passenger staterooms are limited so far down from the library and smoking room as would be equivalent to first stories on land, these elevators seem to be a very essential in the construction of staterooms of this size. They eliminate all necessary stair climbing except from the promenade deck to the boat deck.

The lowest of the eight decks, just above the boiler rooms, will be used for carrying the ship's stores, baggage, freight, etc. Next above is the lower deck, devoted mainly to third-class passengers. This deck is twenty feet higher, but it is hardly so recognized as such by landmarks, as nearly all of the space is filled with separate staterooms, many of them outside rooms, lighted by portholes near the top, just where the water line.

Dining Saloon in Sea-Floor Hundred.
The third is called the main deck, and is given to first-class staterooms, staterooms and staterooms, with that accompaniment of bath, dressing rooms, etc. This comes the upper deck, which contains the floor of the great dining room, which is 60 feet wide and 120 feet long, and will be furnished company to match the record set 800 persons. The central portion of the dining saloon has the height of two full decks and is covered with a vast dome of cathedral glass. Also on this deck are staterooms of cabins de luxe.

The ship, or shelter deck, completes the upper portion of the vessel. Above this are the bridge deck, the promenade deck and the boat deck—all of which are devoted to the accommodation of first-class passengers. On each side of the central tier of staterooms there are a broad promenade open to the weather.

One of the most interesting features of these new passenger steamships is that they represent the established conviction on the part of their owners that ocean travelers of the future will demand more than the mere comfort and luxury while crossing the Atlantic which they enjoy in their own homes, or in the best hotels.

In the way of eating and drinking there already had been provided, but not in the way of sleeping accommodations and the other conveniences and luxuries of private apartments on land. Even in the case of a few cabins de luxe aboard the best of sailing ships, the private and purely personal accommodations were still cramped and difficult to endure by persons used to staterooms on land. Many staterooms have still the berths dived to the wall, one above another as in sleeping cars, with opportunities for dressing, and the toilet habits better than aboard a Pullman.

Staterooms 50 Per Cent. Larger.
But on these new Cunarders all the first-class cabins will be 50 per cent. larger than any other vessels. They will be fine, square rooms, single and so wide, with toilet conveniences and bedrooms may be placed on the floor of the apartment, above out of these ships and across the ocean without mistaking any of the staterooms of home.

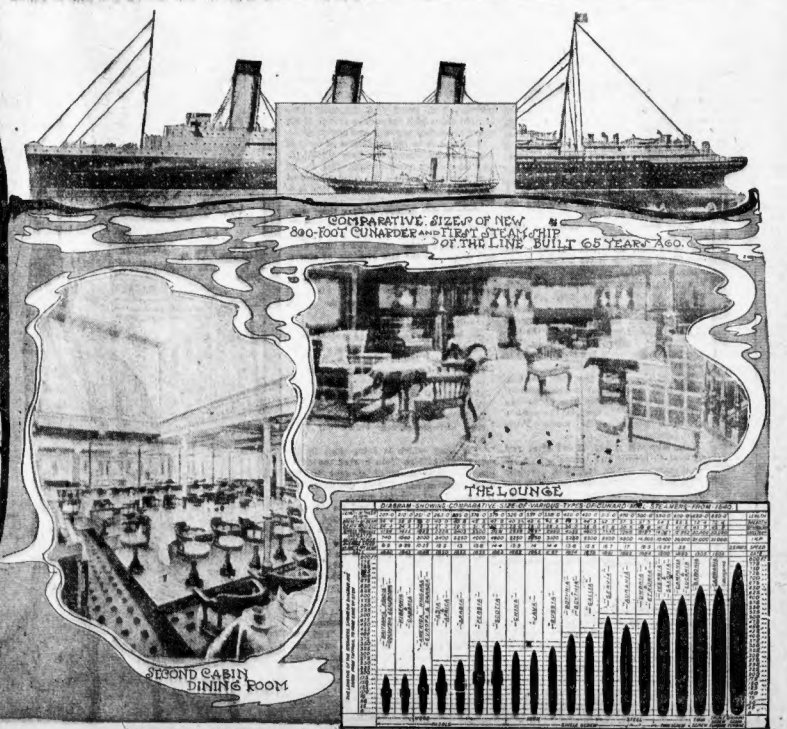

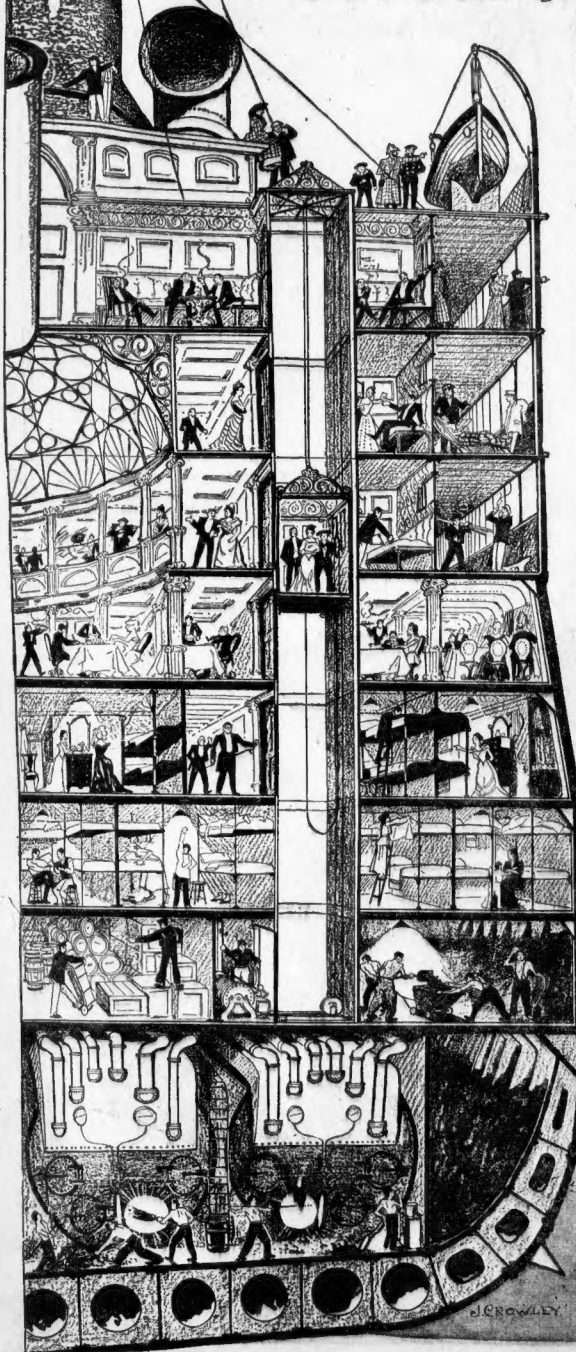

As has been mentioned, even the stateroom passengers will no longer be crowded into the general barracks of ordinary times. Much of the space devoted to them will be divided into staterooms, many of which will be outside rooms with portholes opening to the weather. This arrangement will prove a great blessing to women and children traveling without the protection of masculine members of their family. It will provide immigrants with greater comfort and more decent surroundings than many of them were ever exposed to.

Ships 300 Feet Longer Since 1881.

Since the beginning of the era of steel construction the great representative ships of the Cunard Company, up to these giant new ones now in process of construction, are those, with the dates given on which they were launched: Servia, 1884, 610 feet long, 167 inches, 7,200 tons; Umbria and Servia, 1884, 600 feet long, 165 inches, 7,200 tons; Campania and Umbria, 1884, 600 feet long, 165 inches, 12,000 tons. They came the big, swift boats of 60 feet wide and 120 feet long, and will be furnished company to match the record set 800 persons.

The new Cunarders, which will increase the speed standard to more than 25 knots, create a situation which has no parallel since 1881, when the City of New York and the City of Paris, the first twin-screw ships to be seen in the Atlantic service, were hailed as "ocean phonies."

Furthermore, the new ships will apply the supreme test to that comparatively recent innovation in the application of power, the turbine engine. It seems to be a curious feature of these machines, which so multiply the transmission of steam power to the propellers of steamships, that they are constantly doing more than is expected of them. When tested in the turbine while crossing the Atlantic which they enjoy in their own homes, or in the best hotels.

Smart Draperies for the Head and Shoulders

BY MRS OSBORN
CREATOR OF FASHIONS
FOR THE FASHIONABLE
AMERICA.

Old-Fashioned Shawls a Fad of the Season.—Long and Square Scarfs of Many Kinds to Be Worn by Smart

Women.—Silk, Crocheted, Knitted and Woven Scarfs Vie with Lace in Popularity. Passing of the Face Veil.

HERETOFORE the face veil has taken first rank among draperies for the head. A year ago the collection it was to be seen upon pretty nearly all the heads. Nearly every veil in present consideration from the automobile point of view, because of the tendency among smartly gowned women not to wear veils for any purpose except automobiling.

In the country a woman sometimes finds occasions when a veil is necessary, and she wears a large square of lace draped over her face. The same square of lace is draped upon an automobile hat and fastened down firmly enough to afford protection to the hair and face.

The practical veil for the automobile is, upon nearly square, and is hung all over the head, trying in any becoming manner under the chin, to one side or the other. The last veil are tied in front, but the automobile veil is so arranged as to give protection to the hair and neck from dust.

Uplifted is no longer a feature of the automobile, and there can be no need of giving the face artistically over the veil and about the face. They are nearly thrown, and the best ones are always crocheted, but quite simply, the trimming consisting of two or three rows of narrow lace, and the face veil is as simple as the automobile veil.

Practically all such veils are chiffon, though a thin silk is also found among the veils. In both cases the material of the veil must match the costume.

What with matching colors in all of these accessories a woman has a time, and the face veil is as simple as the automobile veil.

It is not to prove injurious to the eyesight of such an open dress that they are so simple. They are simple for the purpose of giving the face veil a simple design around a piece of cashmere, two or more yards in length, and presto the shawl is complete.

A still more popular fashion is to buy themselves admirably in graceful draperies, and the material being of a soft, flexible quality that drapes better for shawl purposes than anything I know.

A great many people already have these shawls, and all they need do is to have them draped in more popular color, such as electric blue, greenish red and so on.

Chiffon and soft scarfs of some sort are the fashion in which all can share, since the Indian silk comes in the loveliest form of hand-made shawl of light wool may look good upon a woman's shoulders.

Often very delicate flower patterns are shown over the scarf and a wide border of the flowers in more vivid patterns surrounds the scarf. Pompadour is to be seen in Figure A. It is a long piece of cashmere and is also shown in the Egyptian shawl, with its jeweled effects in geometrical patterns.

Chiffon and silk scarfs and shawls will be worn, both in plain and fancy effects. The Egyptian shawl is in elaborate stripes of gold and silver.

One of the pretty forms of silk scarfs is to be seen in Figure A. It is a long piece of cashmere and is also shown in the Egyptian shawl, with its jeweled effects in geometrical patterns.

There has been a wonderful increase in the wearing of mantillas and other forms of shawl draperies. It is quite safe to predict that New York girls will wear the dress of Spain, this coming winter, in the grace with which they will wear the Spanish mantilla.

The revival of scarfs of lace in England is also due to the fact for these which Queen Alexandra wears. Her collection of lace is one of the most valuable in the world, and it is some wonderfully rare Venetian lace she has precious and semi-precious gem set, each jewel being mounted on a gold wire and fastened in button fashion to the lace.

Following this we have the Egyptian shawl, with its jeweled effects in geometrical patterns.

themselves admirably in graceful draperies, and the material being of a soft, flexible quality that drapes better for shawl purposes than anything I know.

A great many people already have these shawls, and all they need do is to have them draped in more popular color, such as electric blue, greenish red and so on.

Chiffon and soft scarfs of some sort are the fashion in which all can share, since the Indian silk comes in the loveliest form of hand-made shawl of light wool may look good upon a woman's shoulders.

patterns probably could not be well depicted.

While on the subject of face scarfs, it is to be remembered that one is much better off without any face scarf than with a cheap one. Face is something which must be good to be worth wearing in no disguise, even as an article in a scarf or mantle.

As a dress ornamenting the face of face is often particularly for the reason that they are not conspicuous and are soon cast aside, but rare face scarfs are worth the consideration of a gentleman, and many of them count their lace of more worth than their jewels. For the reason that it can never be copied and increases in value with age.

Some of the smart shawls are showing shawls combining two colors in delicate effects, such as pale blue and pale pink and white, scarfs of gold and white, and such combinations, carrying out the color scheme in the fringe.

Quite a unique scarf was exhibited by one worker in such dainty articles. It was of rare white silk, clipped around the edges, and with a silk of lead center.

The scarf was very dainty and soft and completed by a fringe of clipped wool, made to what is known as the "mouse fringe."

In regard to the materials of which shawls are made that the coming of this fashion gives general satisfaction to all classes. For every woman may make herself feeling in a Spanish mantilla and comfortable in a Spanish.

FIGURES SHOW HOW ALL BUSINESS DEPENDS ON THE "COMMON PEOPLE"

"The income of 10 per cent of the people equals the total income of the remaining 90 per cent."

How Our National Wealth Is Distributed.

The inequality in the distribution of the national riches is rendered strikingly obvious by arranging the data as follows:

CLASS.	NUMBER OF FAMILIES.	WEALTH.	AVERAGE PER FAMILY.
Rich....	1,000,000	$43,000,000,000	$43,000,000
Middle....	1,200,000	7,500,000,000	6,250
Working....	11,565,000	117,500,000	968

Income Per Family in the United States.

Men are distinguished from all other animals by the fact that they create wealth. In the animal kingdom, the difference between the lion (fleeing over the land) and the lioness (fleeing over the land) is the difference between the lion and the lioness.

By Rene Bache.

It is the poor man that counts, after all, in the business of this country. He, by the money he pays, sustains our great industries, supports the great stores in which the products of the world are displayed, and renders profitable the commerce that we conduct on a gigantic scale with foreign nations.

Notwithstanding the fact that the concentration of wealth in the hands of the few has gone much further in the United States than anywhere else in the world, the "common people" have the lion's share of the money income. It is they who do the buying, wherever anything is for sale, and, for the cash which they handle and spend, practically all of the business now going on in this country would come to an abrupt stop; the stores would put up their shutters, the factories would suspend operations, and our national commercial prosperity would come to an end. Industrially speaking, we should be ruined.

The business of the United States depends upon the "common people," and, in the distribution of the national wealth, the well-to-do has the lion's share. Without them it could get along very well—though it is not to be denied that their purchases of much of the nation's output.

There are in this country at the present time 10,000,000 families, or 200,000,000 persons whose income is $5,000 or over. Taken all together, they have the lion's share of the national wealth.

"The common people have $10,000,000,000 a year to spend."

The dictionary definition of the word "common" is to have to do with trade and money.

This does not mean our case. It is far too narrow. Emerson taught long since that the acquisition of money from a source of honest labor is the only way to secure the culture.

President Wilson adds: "This idea has become more and more accepted by the people of the United States, and it is the basis of the economic education of youth, and in a brief address I heard him say business as among the learned professions."

The addition of schools of commerce, dentistry and agriculture to more American universities gives additional testimony to the accuracy of that declaration. It is a statement somewhat frequently made that, while the priest and the soldier were heroes of past generations, the capitalist of industry will prove to be the hero of the future.

The prophet of Emerson and the common man have modified the definition of culture and cultivated man, and as a result, the definition of business and the business man has also been changed.

Therefore we are warranted in using the term business as including all money-making occupations, individual or corporate; commercial, financial, industrial or professional; the work that produces the goods and services that we need for our daily lives.

President Wilson adds: "This idea has become more and more accepted by the people of the United States, and it is the basis of the economic education of youth, and in a brief address I heard him say business as among the learned professions."

WAS IT FATE?

"You May Possibly Live Five Years--- No More," the Doctors Told Frederick Hammann, the Consumptive. Then Hammann Was Sent to Vienna Where He Completely Recovered.

THAT WAS FIVE YEARS AGO.

And How Hammann Was Accidentally Drowned While Swimming a Few Days Ago.

Baby Helen, Frederick Hammann's Daughter.

FREDERICK HAMMANN, emaciated, racked by a terrible cough and weakened by the night sweats of an advanced stage of consumption, five years ago landed in this vessel from celebrated specialists.

"You may possibly live five years--no more." Now, at the end of five years, he is dead, but not from consumption. Was it Fate that inspired the dictum of the specialists that permitted him to be cured of his dread disease only to be drowned at the expiration of the time allotted him?

After that dictum this young man became the most celebrated invalid in the world. He was sent to Vienna to test the value of a consumptive cure. Three months later he came home pronounced cured. He looked cured. His mind had been cured, for an insurance company, whose medical examiners knew all the facts of his case, accepted a risk upon his life.

He obtained employment in a New York drug store because of his recovery. He was married, became a father and was happy in the expectation of long life free from the pangs of disease.

Tooth, which had tried upon his heels, had died and sleep and wakefulness with him, that had been his shadow, retired and was forgotten. But death had only gone into the background for a time. Death, whom the doctors had eluded, was plotting how he should catch the doctor. And after five years he did, but it was by a trick. It snatched him and pointed out at least it won, for on August 18 it reached out a relentless hand and dragged him down and held him, and this time it would not let him go.

Drowned in Shallow Water.

While bathing alone at Inwood, Long Island, he sank from view in comparatively shallow water a few feet from shore. A boy caught swimming him from the beach, with a gardener's spade upon his chest, said:

"His eyes were just a little watery, then he went down, and he never came up."

The boy gave the alarm. The body was washed ashore while it was yet warm. And the villagers who gathered about it while the doctor worked valiantly, whispered awe-struckly: "Hammann who defied consumption, and conquered it, has been drowned in the shallow water of the lake."

He died at twenty-nine--when it would seem that there was every reason he should have lived. The Rev. Bull Hobb, pastor of Emanuel's Lutheran Church, who ordered Mr. Hammann, who performed his marriage ceremony, who christened his little daughter Helen, and officiated at his bed and side, said:

"There was no one from whom death seemed farther away than Frederick Hammann. We cannot guess why this strange visitation has been made. We ask 'why' but we cannot know."

And so it is that Frederick Hammann, who answered the riddle of medical science in life, in death is merely adding another. Why would not Death rain? Why must I, for whom life held so much, be here after all? Why did Death keep the cruel chase to which he had been fairly beaten?

His Case Watched by Millions.

When it was first announced by this newspaper that a celebrated Vienna physician had discovered a cure for tuberculosis it was determined to test it by sending a victim of "The Great White Plague" across the Atlantic, putting him under the celebrated physician's treatment and watching the result.

At this time Dr. M. P. Schelling, who had been noticing the progress of a boyish looking young man of twenty-four in his drug store. He remembered that the young man had been coughing two or three times a week for medicines for a long time. He was growing weaker and paler and thinner with each visit. The young man had a racing cough, and a pronounced stoop. High in his cheeks hung the flaming streaks of the disease. And the young man's clothes were growing shabby. For a year he had not been able to work much and confidence in his recovery. Dr. Schelling called his clerk and whispered:

"Tell that young man we won't charge him for medicines any more, at least not until he is better."

And about this time Dr. Daniel Cook, who had been treating him, said despairingly: "It seems to be of no use. Hammann, well, at least, you needn't pay me any longer."

When Frederick Hammann went back to the little home in Brooklyn and told his mother of the kindness of the physicians she burst into tears.

"The doctors are very kind, Frederick," she sobbed. "But it means, don't you see, that they mean they have given up on you? They think it is hopeless!"

And so they did. One after another physician had examined him, one after another made the same report: "Pathetic--advanced--incurable."

Then came the last ray of hope. Arrangements were made to send the young man abroad to be treated by the great Viennese specialist. December 16 he sailed. He was a weakling, a feeble creature as he was seen across the gangplank of the big ship. Heaving a burdensome load of baggage from a Russian port, he was sent on the after deck where he was again met by the sailing crew, cheer, welcome, and a warm firewell to center him, which greatly pleased him.

crenating; sleep and appetite remain good. Doctor increased the dose of medicine. Weather clear and mild. It is very quiet here. On account of the holidays I feel very lonely and deserted.

"January 2--Doctor is very much satisfied and says in two months all traces of the disease will have vanished, when growth checks me. Weather very mild, which prevents me from leaving the building."

"January 10--Cough a little better. Am very happy. He shaken up and dispirited by my cough the last few days that my appetite is not nearly so good as it was. I sleep restfully. The doctor explained that it was due to a recurrence of an old catarrh trouble in the mouth and throat, that it is nothing serious, but that it held up my general improvement."

"January 11--Cough still very stubborn, but not so serious as previously. Sleep better. No appetite improving. Obtained some cards. My Russian friend called. We walked away several hours. Curious we did not think of this before."

"January 14--Cough gone, chest better! Weakness entirely gone. Doctor told me to-day he would allow me to go out to breathe if the weather permitted. After being confined to the house for several weeks this will be a perfect treat; feel very good this evening."

"January 15--Weather clear and warm. Doctor allowed me to go out. My friends showed me the principal places and buildings in Vienna. We had a good time and the walk did not tire me in the least. The air and sunlight made me feel like a new man."

"January 16--Cough getting better every day; when much cleared, appetite and sleep splendid; no pain; no headache. I feel I am fast recovering."

As he passed through London on his return home young Hammann was examined by Dr. Bywater Willard, a prominent physician of that city, and Dr. William Broadhead, of whom it has been said: "He is without question the greatest English physician." After the examination Dr. Willard said:

"Although the right lung shows absolute signs of having been affected with consumption, at present no active disease can be found, and what abnormal signs I now find are only scar tissue, the result of a healed wound."

Returned the Picture of Health.

In March Frederick Hammann returned to America. Preceding him came the report of his physician: "Judging from present conditions, I am of the opinion that Hammann's lungs are no longer the seat of disease, and that he is completely cured."

And the appearance of the young man as he ran down the gang plank up which he had been laid, leaning heavily on the arm of a friend less than three months before, confirmed the report. Broomed and laughing he stood in a group of relatives and friends feeling delightfully about him, and told the story of his marvellous recovery, that Dr. William Broadhead had declared a "miracle."

He had weighed when he sailed to Europe 123 pounds. When he returned he weighed 132. His cheeks were round and brown and a normal color.

The curious and inquiring had noticed that among the group who had watched Hammann sail, with tears, and welcomed him home with high spirits, was a young man, not much older than Hammann, who looked larger and stouter than at any one but his mother. They learned that she was Katherine Martin, a school-teacher, and sister of the celebrated patient. That was all they heard at the time, but two years later a modest marriage with regard to the young man was no surprise to welcome him back from Vienna.

It was on Easter Sunday, 1902, that the romance, interrupted by the service of death, was consummated by the wedding of Katherine Martin and Frederick Hammann. They celebrated the occasion with a dinner at the Hotel de Ville. The bride and groom were both in the prime of life. The bride was a young woman of twenty, and the groom was a young man of twenty-five.

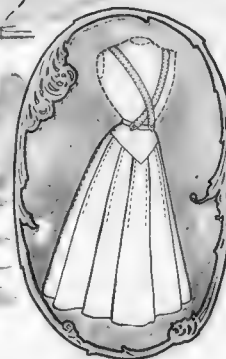

His employer in the same drug store where five years ago the workman had been laid to charge him, no more for work done, and Frederick Hammann had done an excellent year's work.

Take a week's vacation, Fred," he said to him. "Better take a week and half in the shore for a while of work air." Young Hammann was very happy. He was very healthy and little one still like in visit relatives. On the first morning after their arrival he said: "I'm longing for a swim. I'm going out to sea in ten or twelve days."

He was found of his record as a long-distance swimmer, made his first journey to Virginia. A boy cousin followed him to see him. He had "worked the shore." Frederick Hammann pushed the water upon the shore and shoulders, and the water was very hot. Then he swam farther and plunged into the sparkling water. There he lay for some time, a sudden splash before him, and he was very happy. No one knew. He died alone. When his body was found there was the family and friends who had come to the pier to see him off.

SUNDAY AMERICAN JOURNAL-EXAMINER PATTERNS.

T HIS charming waist and skirt design shown on this page introduces the newest and smartest features of the advance styles for early Fall. They indicate how graciously tucks will figure in the new fashions. There are to be tucked sleeves on turked waists, tucked shirts and even tucked collars and cuffs. Fashion predicts that to be smart you must go in for tucks as never before.

The waist design is tucked to resemble box-plait. The tiny tucks in the sleeve retain the fulness of the wrist and simulate a deep cuff. The skirt is a graceful seve-gored plaited affair stitched in tuck effect to knee depth. A shaped yoke which fits smoothly over the hips is provided for, as are also suspenders. Their use is optional, however. The skirt may be round or walking length and allows plenty of swing about the feet.

You can easily make the waist and skirt for the costume by using the two patterns which are offered today in the Sunday American-Journal-Examiner pattern series for ten cents each. Accompanying each pattern are complete instructions for making the garment.

The waist pattern, No. 186-3106, is in six sizes, from 22 to 42 inches bust, and the skirt pattern, No. 186-2803, is in six sizes, from 20 to 30 inches waist.

Fill in the proper accompanying blank for each pattern required, giving your name, postoffice address and size of pattern, and mail with 10 cents in money or stamps to "Outing Costume Patterns."

If both patterns, waist and skirt are ordered then fill in both blanks and mail with 20 cents, 10 cents for each pattern. To complete the costume in a medium size 7 1/2 yards of material 44 inches wide will be required.

Mail this filled-in blank and 20 cents in money. Mail this filled-in blank and 10 cents in money or stamps for the waist pattern.

BEARS ROUT RAMPANT BULLS.

Heavy Selling, as a Result of Profit-Taking and Manipulation, Checked an Upward Movement of Market STOCK RALLY WAS BEGUN YESTERDAY

Big Profits Have Now Been Made on Both Sides of Market, and Another Rise in Prices Is Looked For

Wall street is worried again. After weeks of exuberant confidence in its ability to lift prices to a level not felt to be reached, the speculative structure on Wall street is again being shaken.

The bears made an onslaught on prices last week and drove them down several points from the heights reached during the bull movement. To some this is a healthy reaction. To others it is an indication that the end of the bull movement is in sight. What is most probable is that prices are now at about the level of the excellent underlying conditions which go to regulate stock prices.

Prices are far above their level of a year ago, and a recession of a few points from the exuberant high to which they have been prevailing is not significant except as a check on the speculative structure. The rally which began yesterday was a reaction to the heavy selling of the week before. It was a reaction to the fact that the market had been driven down several points from the heights reached during the bull movement. To some this is a healthy reaction. To others it is an indication that the end of the bull movement is in sight. What is most probable is that prices are now at about the level of the excellent underlying conditions which go to regulate stock prices.

Hammered the Market.

There seems to be the big question mark because they were decided during the past week that prices were a little high, and a reaction of a few points was expected. The market was driven down several points from the heights reached during the bull movement. To some this is a healthy reaction. To others it is an indication that the end of the bull movement is in sight. What is most probable is that prices are now at about the level of the excellent underlying conditions which go to regulate stock prices.

Peace Had Effect

The desire has been generally helped by a constant flow of news, which has been a great help to the market. The market was driven down several points from the heights reached during the bull movement. To some this is a healthy reaction. To others it is an indication that the end of the bull movement is in sight. What is most probable is that prices are now at about the level of the excellent underlying conditions which go to regulate stock prices.

European Capital Available.

There is an enormous amount of European capital which has been tied up in anticipation of heavy war loans, and this will now be available for investment. The market was driven down several points from the heights reached during the bull movement. To some this is a healthy reaction. To others it is an indication that the end of the bull movement is in sight. What is most probable is that prices are now at about the level of the excellent underlying conditions which go to regulate stock prices.

SPECULATORS SELLING, BUT INVESTORS BUYING

Speculators who are on the spot and can make quick moves are selling the market just now on hard spots. But investors who do not intend to follow the hour-to-hour fluctuations are either buying or are holding on to what they have already bought. The selfishness and rapidity of leading interests make the outlook very rosy. There has been no distribution of stocks such as would warrant a severe decline. But technical conditions do warrant a reaction of greater extent than there has been. No student of the markets would be so naïve as to say it all over because there has been a rally. It would be only natural to see a decline of even greater violence than the one of the past week follow a sharp advance in the coming week.

But, however stormy the financial skies may seem, it must not be forgotten that the great sun of unrepented prosperity is shining behind the clouds. The speculative condition is sound. There has been no wild participation by the public. The public is timid, but not hurt. It has all its money safe. But its money is earning practically nothing, and the temptation is growing stronger every day to make it earn something in the stock market.

The time will come in the near future when people will feel resentful over the fine profits they might have made. They will then enter the market in the desperate hope of matching some bargains even yet. This is what the big bankers are counting on. They know it will come because there is lots of human nature in the public.

The largest success of our immense mail order business is our "Old 56" Whiskey. It is the best value we have ever offered during the 50 years we have been in business. Each mail brings an increasing number of orders from every corner of New England, and every order brings a repeat order.

It is the finest distillation of Kentucky. It is matured in Old Dutch Cornish Spanish Sherry Wine casks and has the rich flavor and bouquet that make it famous. We receive it direct from the distillery unadulterated, with a small amount of pure water to put the price beyond all competition.

The man who orders once becomes our regular customer. Send your order in today. Every order shipped same day order is received.

THE LOVE OF LULU AND LEANDER

Copyright, 1936, by the American-Journal Syndicate, Great Britain Rights Reserved

1. CHORUS: "What's the matter, Leander! Come back on the train! It's going to start. You'll be left!"
LEANDER: "I don't believe it's the right train. I'm going in the station to find out."
LULU: "More of your foolish capers, Leander. Charley and the Lieutenant both said it was the right train."

2. LULU: "Oh, Leander, I told you! I told you! I knew you would be left. Now we've got to go on the picnic without you."
LEANDER (whose voice is drowned by the moving train): "Stop it! You are on the wrong train. STOP!"

3. CONDUCTOR (collecting tickets—after they have gone fifteen miles): "Why this train doesn't go to Picnic Grove. You are on the wrong train. I'll let you off at Mosquito Heaven—that's our next stop. You can get a train back from there in about six hours."
ALL: "It xx (1) 1117 xxs 1111 xx 1111 xx 1111"

4. LULU: "Charley Onthespot, Lieutenant Sharpshot! This is all your fault. Twenty miles from home in this bleak and barren wilderness. Oh, Leander, I wish I had had more confidence in you."
POPPER: "This is an outrage. Ye gods! Just look at the mosquitoes!"
HOMMER: "It's a mean trick Charley and Lieutenant Sharpshot have played on us."

5. POPPER: "Ye gods! I'm being stung to death."
HOMMER: "Oh, this is fearful. I'm being eaten piecemeal! I'll never speak to those two renegades again."
CHARLEY ONTHESPOT: "Great Scott! We're in for it this time!"
LIEUTENANT: "And we thought we had the joke on Leander."
LULU: "And just to think, six hours more of this. Not! Not! Oh, here comes Leander in an automobile!"

6. LEANDER: "Sorry, boys, but this machine can hold no more. But the walking is good; it's only twenty miles back. Better try it. Those mosquitoes will eat you alive by the time that train comes. Yes, Lulu; just as soon as the train left I got this auto and followed you up. I was sure you were on the wrong train."
LULU: "Oh, Leander, dear, I will always have confidence in your opinion after this. Oh, you dear, kind Leander."

FOXY GRANDPA

SCHOOL BEGINS AGAIN AND THE BOYS PLAY HOOKEY, BUT THEY CATCH A WONDERFUL FISH

1. BOYS: "Let's go over to the dock and fish this morning. We will take our books so Granpa won't suspect that we are playing hookey."

2. BOYS: "Well, this is the time we sneaked away from Granpa. It's lucky we did not have to bring our poles."

3. BOYS: "Goodness! but wonder where all the fish are this morning!"

4. BOYS: "We have a nibble; let's pull 'in!"

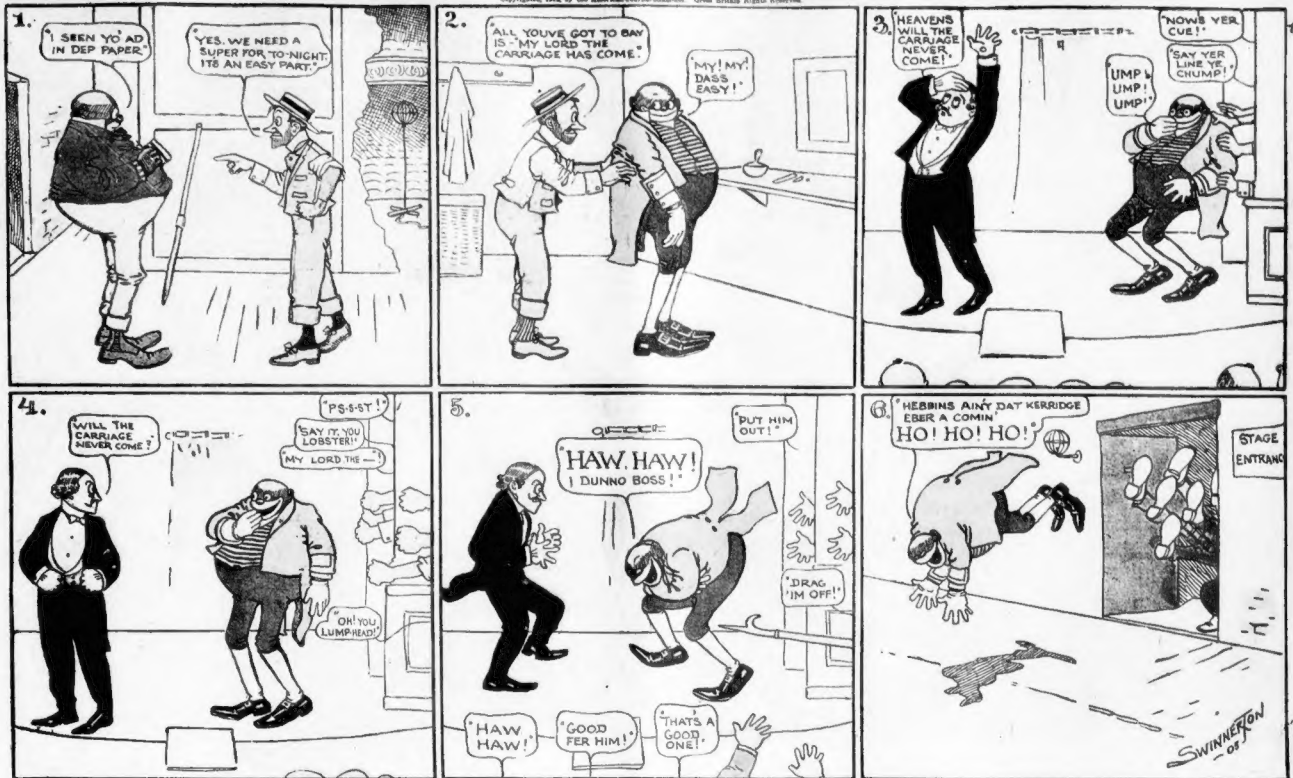

5. BOYS: "Why, hello, this is like our books."

6. GRANDPA: "Now that you young mischiefers have your books run along to school before some spanking is due in this neighborhood."
